General Summary

Dr. Yorio is a native Texan, born and raised in Burleson near Fort Worth. He is board certified in medical oncology, hematology, and internal medicine. He serves as the Central Texas Research Site Leader for Texas Oncology and Sarah Cannon Research Institute. He is actively involved in clinical trial research for melanoma, renal cell carcinoma, prostate cancer, bladder cancer, and head & neck cancer with publications in the areas of melanoma, renal cell cancer, lung cancer and colorectal cancer. He has served as a national and local principal investigator for multiple clinical trials and he strives to bring cutting edge treatments and new research to patients here in Austin.

Dr. Yorio and his wife met as undergraduate students at The University of Texas, and like many Longhorns, wanted to make Austin their lifelong home. He enjoys spending time with his wife and two amazing children, playing guitar & tennis, jogging, skiing, and paddleboarding. He and his family are also avid Texas Longhorn fans.
